In the midst of a busy day of ministry, Jesus received two urgent requests for healing, but in entirely different ways. Jairus, a synagogue official, approached Jesus directly with the plea to heal his young daughter who was critically ill. As Jesus set out to respond to this need, a woman followed him, pushing through the crowds in order to be healed. Because of her flow of blood, the woman should not have been in the crowd, as she was considered "unclean" and would defile the people (Lv 15:25-33). The woman had spent years seeking a cure to no avail, and in faith-filled desperation she touched the hem of Jesus' garment (tzi-tzit – tassels worn on the hem of a Jew's garment to remind him to keep the covenant commanded in Deut 22:12). A surge of power went out from Jesus and the woman was healed instantly. Although the woman was fearful, Jesus assured her that her faith had made her whole. At that moment, Jesus was informed that Jairus' daughter had died. Jesus told the distraught father not to be afraid but to put his faith in him. Jesus entered the house where the little girl lay, took her by the hand, and raised her to new life. The child was twelve years old, the marriageable age of a girl at that time, and the same number of years that the woman was afflicted by a hemorrhage. Jesus restored both to be bearers of new life.

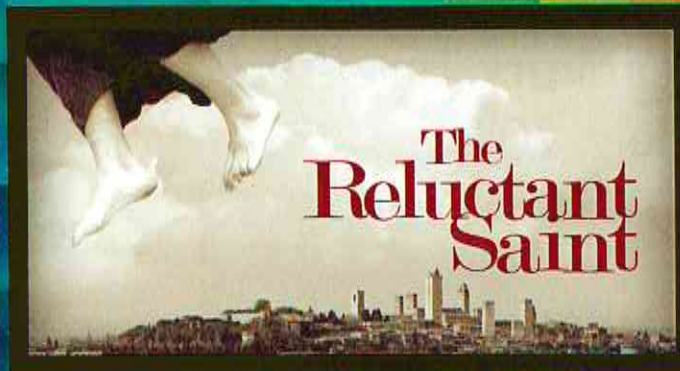

TO LOVE:
Lord Jesus, help me to reach out to others with your healing touch.

TO SERVE:
How can I bring Jesus' healing to someone in pain?
